

Below are ideas to ignite your brainstorming about participation in Well-Being Week in Law.

For organizations, be sure to recruit your leaders. Progress will depend on respected influencers aligning their words and actions with the cultural value of well-being--including being good role models. Your activities are much more likely to be perceived as credible and to be effective if leaders are highly visible participants and proponents.

- Plan an alcohol-free Happy Hour with fun activities to boost cohesion and belonging (e.g., teambuilding activities, playful activities like board games, bonding activities like "10 questions," etc.).
- Organize an attorneyclient relationship event that includes law firms and corporate legal departments to discuss facilitators and obstacles to their collective well-being.
- Have an off-site retreat or internal meetings to discuss ways to remove obstacles and implement practices to promote health, happiness, and work engagement.
- Ask a senior leader to host a town hall to discuss well-being or convey support for Well-Being Week activities via email.

- Invite a panel of lawyers to share about their own well-being practices and challenges. It might include panelists willing to share their own stories about managing mental health and alcohol use disorders. Talking openly about such challenges is one practice that can help lower stigma, which is an obstacle to help-seeking.
- Attend or organize a

 Mental Health First Aid training.
- Plan a Technology Blackout. For one day, ask people not to email, text, or call colleagues outside designated hours (e.g., after 6:30 pm) unless it is an emergency. It may encourage organizations to rethink the unthinkable.

- Hold a positive leadership workshop to educate senior leaders about the powerful impact that leaders and positive work cultures have on members' wellbeing, satisfaction, and engagement. Leaders are primary drivers of work culture---good or bad.
- Invite a therapist or professional coach to hold on-site "office hours" to lower perceived barriers to exploring therapy or coaching as helpful options.
- Circulate a research blurb about the positive effects of gratitude (including in the workplace). Invite your colleagues to convey their appreciation on gratitude postcards that you design.

SHARE YOUR IDEAS

We invite you to share your activities on social media to inspire others to take action to bolster well-being in the legal profession. Use the hashtag #lawyerwellbeing.

- Hold a Judge's Forum to solicit input about how court proceedings (rules, procedures, interactions) support or detract from lawyer well-being.
- Leave a $5 coffee shop gift card on everyone's desk with a note asking them to invite someone else in the office to connect for coffee. Include a note about the health benefits of coffee and tea.
- Hold a lunch for people experiencing a similar work-life challenge (e.g., caring for aging parents, small children, nearing retirement, etc.) to provide support and share ideas and resources.
- Snack of the Day: Offer a different free healthy snack every day of Well-Being Week.
- Have a Bring Your Dog Work Day and distribute research findings about the stress-relieving benefits of petting dogs and cats.

- Host a lunch where everyone is given a few minutes to share their favorite well-being app, technology, book, or healthy recipe.
- At every meeting held during Well-Being Week, incorporate some aspect of well-being-either by adding it as a formal agenda item or by including a positive practice (e.g., all attendees say what's going well, what's the most meaningful thing they're working on, what they're grateful for, etc.).
- Host a healthy foods potluck lunch or dinner.
 Ask participants to provide their recipes to collect into a healthy cookbook.
- For one day, encourage stand-up or walking meetings.
- Start a Mindfulness Monday tradition of group meditation to kick off the week with a healthy mindset. Even small doses of meditation are beneficial.

- Organize an internal
 "speed networking" or
 "speed mentoring" event
 to enable connections among people who do not frequently interact. Provide a list of topics to facilitate discussion.
- Purchase small plants for everyone in the office. Include a note about research finding that green plants help combat stress and boost productivity.
- Have a drawing for free well-being-related items, e.g., FitBit, Muse: The Brain Sensing Headband, Bellabeat Leaf Health Tracker, a treadmill desk, Panda Planner for Productivity and Gratitude, adult coloring book for stress-relief, etc.
- Write a gratitude letter to someone you've been meaning to thank and read it out loud to them.
- Choose a well-beingrelated TED talk, prepare discussion questions, and hold a watch and discussion session.

- Host a Laugh Party to watch a funny movie or invite a local comedian. In the invite, refer to research about the positive effects of laughter on social bonding and stress relief.
- Coordinate a Sleep Challenge to get at least 7 hours of sleep every day of Well- Being Week. Ask senior lawyers to post their sleep times each day to provide good role modeling. Distribute information about the negative impact of sleep deprivation on mental and physical health. Give out Healthy Sleep First Aid kits that include eye masks, chamomile or Valerian root tea, a lavender scented product, and a tip sheet for good sleep.
- Hire a massage therapist to give free chair massages. Provide information about the physical and mental health benefits of massage.
- Start an office library of well-being-related books. You can find a book recommendation list on the event website.

- Tie a smiley face balloon on your colleagues' chairs or leave smiley face stress balls on their desks along with a note about the mental and physical health benefits of positive emotions.
- Organize a Lunch & Learn session related to one of the dimensions of lawyer well-being on which Well-Being Week focuses.
- Place a healthy treat on colleagues' desks each day of Well-Being Week.
- Organize training on effectively managing interpersonal conflict, which has been called: "one of the largest reducible organizational costs and the single most important workplace stressors for organizations to address" (Wright et al., 2017). Include information that poorly managed conflict is corrosive to workplaces and can cause depression, anxiety, burnout, and physical health complaints.

- Host a "Volunteer Fair" that invites local charitable organizations to discuss their missions and give information about practical ways to volunteer. Ask respected lawyers to talk about their volunteer efforts. Include information about the mental health benefits of volunteering.
- Host a Meaningful Work event. Include information about meaningful work's strong tie to engagement and mental health. Do a Job Crafting activity aimed at shaping work experiences to more closely align with participants' values, interests, and strengths.
- Organize a Workplace Strengths and Well-Being session to help colleagues identify their strengths and plan to use them in new ways. You can find a Strengths Worksheet on the event website under the Resources tab.
- Hang pouches (adorned with a Well-Being Week logo) on each office door and invite the group to drop in notes to each other conveying gratitude, noticing strengths, or providing kind or encouraging words.

Assemble a fun Stress Buster First Aid Kit in a pouch to give colleagues that includes items like a map of local green spaces for lunchtime walks, chewing gum, dark chocolate, an iTunes gift card to purchase relaxing music, thank you cards to express gratitude, a stress test card, peppermint tea, and a notebook to process stressful emotions via writing.

- Organize a workplace health screening.
- Distribute a Lawyer Well-Being Week News Briefing that provides a schedule of activities and tips for individual participation.
- Facilitate work team discussions to brainstorm about strategies for improving the team members' detachment (mentally, physically, and electronically) from work, which is important for well-being and job performance.

Throughout Well-Being Week, encourage small acts of kindness--which have well-being benefits for both the giver and the receiver of kind acts. One option is to exchange names and secretly do acts of kindness for the person you selected during the week. A 2018 study of this type of activity showed boosts in well-being for all participants. Ideas for kind acts can be found on a free acts of kindness calendar and on the Acts of Kindness Worksheet posted on the event website.

Start a Well-Being Book Club. Studies have found that reading and practicing activities in sciencebased books (called "bibliotherapy") can be an effective approach to learn cognitive and behavioral skills to address depression and anxiety. Also, learning and practicing with small groups of "accountability partners" improve chances of success. A few book options are: Get Out of Your Mind and into Your Life and The Mindfulness & Acceptance Workbook for Stress Reduction. Both are workbooks that small groups could use to work on these skills together.

Throw a Lawyer Well-Being Prom for colleagues and their significant others and engage an instructor to give dance lessons. In the Prom invite, reference findings that regular dance combats depression and anxiety and boosts physical health. At the event, give gratitude cards to all significant others, whose support is essential for their partners' well-being and for alleviating the strain of work-life conflict.

Fill a "Thank You For Being Awesome" mug with candy or healthy treats and give it to a colleague with a note of thanks or appreciation. Ask them to refill it and pass it along to someone else. Keep passing the mug throughout the week.

Give a quick training on Active Constructive Responding (ACR).

ACR is an engaged and enthusiastic style of responding to our colleagues' good news.

ACR enhances well-being and relationship quality.
