

Denise A. Robinson is the Founding Principal of The Still Center LLC, a consultancy focused on facilitating personal well-being, meaningful interpersonal connections, and organizational diversity, equity & inclusion. Denise’s work is informed by over 15 years of experience spanning legal, financial, and academic arenas. After counseling clients on a variety of labor & employment matters as a law firm associate, Denise pursued a career building diverse and inclusive institutions, including as a law school and college admissions officer focused on multicultural recruitment for Georgetown University. She continued this pursuit at O’Melveny & Myers LLP, where she was promoted through a series of roles to serve as the firm’s Director of Diversity & Inclusion. Subsequently, Denise served as the Diversity Officer for the International Monetary Fund. Denise is also a registered yoga teacher with Yoga Alliance, which is the foundation of her work in mindfulness, meditation, and other contemplative practices.

As a consultant, Denise performs cultural assessments, provides strategic advice, and delivers training on diversity, equity & inclusion, well-being, and other talent development topics. In addition, she has directed benchmarking surveys and other think tank projects to advance diversity, equity & inclusion in the legal profession. Denise earned her undergraduate degree from Ohio University’s Honors Tutorial College, and she is a graduate of the University of Chicago Law School, where she served as the chapter president of the Black Law Students Association and a student advocate in the Mandel Legal Aid Clinic.
